Summary of reasons
for classification:

The book entitled Cannabis is classified as:

Objectionable except if the availability of the publication is restricted to persons who have attained the age of 18 years.

Cannabis is classified as objectionable except if the availability of the publication is restricted to persons who have attained the age of 18 years because it promotes or encourages criminal acts to such an extent and degree, and in such a manner, that its unrestricted availability is likely to injure the public good.

The book Cannabis is produced for adults with a specific interest in a cross-cultural examination of the history and uses of cannabis as well as law reform issues. The book advocates for the legalisation of cannabis, and as a vehicle for the expression of political views in favour of cannabis law reform, the book has a legitimate purpose. It also contains some material designed to assist growers and users. The material in question is not presented in a manner that would injure the public good if the availability of the magazine is restricted to adults, who are likely to be aware of the legal consequences of cannabis use and cultivation in New Zealand.

In terms of the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990, a ban is neither reasonable nor demonstrably justified. However, there is a likelihood of injury arising if the publication were made available to children and young persons. Restricting the availability of Cannabis to adults limits the rights of New Zealanders to access reading material of their choice but, in this instance, represents the minimum interference with the freedom of expression that is consistent with preventing injury to the public good.
